

Welcome to Madrid

Located in the district of Chamartín we find the Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas (Higher Council for Scientific Research - CSIC), a state-owned agency that works primarily to develop and promote research for the benefit of scientific and technological progress, in collaboration with Spanish and foreign organisations.

CSIC plays a central role in science and technology policy, since it spans basic research right up to knowledge transfer to the productive sector. The driving force for research is provided by its centres and institutes, located all around Spain, and its over 15,000 employees, including 3,000 in-house researchers and just as many PhD holders and scientists in training.
